

Barrett Pinet Architecture's approach has been developed over more than 25 years of the practice and study of architecture, in Australia and internationally.

Visual and aesthetic sensibilities, spatial and tectonic qualities, proportions, the play of light and shade, juxtaposition of mass and textures, the relationship of exterior and interior, the characteristics of materials, construction methods, issues of sustainability, durability, flexibility and change, all form part of the design process, informing the outcome.

Undertaking a wide range of projects, capable of linking with other practices, with support from a variety of consultants, Barrett Pinet Architecture adopts a team approach in working together with clients, authorities, builders, artists, designers and others, towards a successful outcome. Client relationships are developed for the achievement of mutual goals.

Computerized systems, procedures, information data bases and technologies are the subject of continuous improvement within the practice, enhancing services and resources available to our clients.
